Until recently, Japanese corporates have not been interested in using either local or foreign business schools for the development of their future executives. Their in-company programmes have sought the socialisation of the newcomers, the younger the better. The training is highly specific and those who receive it, have neither the capacity nor the incentive to quit. The prevailing belief says Imai, is that management should be born out of experiences and many years of efforts and not learnt from educational institutions. A 1960s survey of Japanese senior executives confirmed that a majority (54%) believed that management capabilities can be attained only on the job and not in universities. However, this view seems to be changing: the same survey revealed that even as early as 1960, 37% of senior executives felt that the universities should teach integrated professional management.

Arnold Toynbee said about Ramakrishna that ‘his religious activity and experience were comprehensive to a degree that had perhaps never before been attained by any other religious genius in India or elsewhere’. You will hear only echoes of such words if you go through some recent works on Ramakrishna published in the West. What is most important in all works for the dissemination of Vedanta philosophy in its bearings on the idea of universal religion is to affirm, without any reservation, that this ideal does not touch any religion as it exists but only urges a universal approach to all religions. By universal religion, Vivekananda meant this mingling of faiths and he thought it was Vedanta, particularly Advaita Vedanta, which could bring about this mingling of spiritual tunes in a grand harmony of faiths.
