Read the Following Passage and answer the questions below

Volcanoes are often associated with earthquakes that occur in the same vicinity. But earthquakes can occur in regions where there are no volcanic eruptions, such as Assam, where in 1897 a major earthquake devastated an area of 150,000 thousand square miles. To the devastation caused by the upheaval itself was added that produced by the floods and storms which followed. Earthquakes of this kind are caused by the movements of “strata” or beds of rock at a weak place or ‘fault” in the crust of the earth. Scientists believe that the process of mountain building is not yet complete and that earthquakes are the consequence. Fortunately, many earthquakes take place beneath the sea. These submarine earthquakes may have no serious effects. In 1755, however, a submarine upheaval produced a great tidal wave which caused enormous devastation and loss of life in Lisbon, capital of Portugal, before the waters receded.

upheaval

B

devastation

C

volcanic eruption

D

Read the Following Passage and answer the questions below:

In their classification of the stages in the evolution of civilizations archeologists use the names of the substances from which tools of different kinds were made. They use stone, bronze, iron, simply because these substances were used mainly for making of implements and weapons, and these objects, lost, broken, discarded or deliberately buried, have been able to resist, to some extent, the decay which occurs when most substances are exposed to oxidation. As well as the substances of which they were made, the way in which the tools themselves are made can characterize evolutionary changes since an implement is always made by an implement, even if it is only one piece of stone used to chip and grind another piece of stone. Food production is often taken to mark the transmission from savagery to barbarism.

Question Description
