To teach is to create a space in which obedience to truth is practised. Space may sound like a vague, poetic metaphor until we realise that it describes experiences of everyday life. We know what it means to be in a green and open field. We know what it means on a crowded rush hour bus. These experiences of physical space have parallels in our relationships with others. On our job we know what it is to be pressed and crowded, our working space diminished by the urgency of deadlines and competitiveness of colleagues. But there are times when deadlines disappear and colleagues co-operate, when everyone has space to move, invent, produce with energy and enthusiasm. With family and friends, we know how it feels to have unreasonable demands placed on us, to be boxed in by the expectations of those nearest to us. But then, there are times when we feel accepted as who we are (or forgiven for who we are not), what at times a spouse or a child or a friend gives us the space both to be and to become.

Question Description

In the passage, "space" is precisely defined as -----

A

a vague, poetic metaphor

a vague sounding metaphor for life

descriptive of everyday experiences

D

physical, mental and emotional states

None of the above

Until recently, Japanese corporates have not been interested in using either local or foreign business schools for the development of their future executives. Their in-company programmes have sought the socialisation of the newcomers, the younger the better. The training is highly specific and those who receive it, have neither the capacity nor the incentive to quit. The prevailing belief says Imai, is that management should be born out of experiences and many years of efforts and not learnt from educational institutions. A 1960s survey of Japanese senior executives confirmed that a majority (54%) believed that management capabilities can be attained only on the job and not in universities. However, this view seems to be changing: the same survey revealed that even as early as 1960, 37% of senior executives felt that the universities should teach integrated professional management.

Question Description

From the options provided below, select the one which indicates the shortcomings of the in-company

A it is too specific to capacitate or incentivise to move to other avenues

B it is obtained on the job, not in the educational institutions/universities

C it seeks socialization of the preferably young newcomers

D it is obtained after years of experience /effort

E None of the above
