Comprehension

Read the following passage and answer the questions given below: -

The fundamental question must now be raised: 'Why do people engage in conversation for conversation's sake?' The reason cannot be that they look upon the affair as a very bright entertainment, for most conversers are only too obviously happy when time arrives for breaking up the party. It cannot be because they feel an overmastering desire for information concerning friends, because, even if such desire existed, it could be stated in ten seconds. Nor can it be because they feel an overmastering desire to impart information concerning themselves, for such a desire, which usually exists in some degree, could be satisfied in ten minutes, and they will stay on long after it is satisfied and even stated. Nor can it be in order to kill time, because they could get far more fun out of the worst book ever written than they could get out of the average pow-wow.
